Scammers Don't Take Summer Vacations

Summer is a season for vacations, family gatherings, road trips, and outdoor adventures. Unfortunately, it's also a busy season for scammers looking to take advantage of unsuspecting consumers. While you're focused on making memories, fraudsters are hard at work creating new ways to steal your personal and financial information.

Here are a few common scams to watch for this summer:

Travel and Vacation Scams

Planning a getaway? Be cautious when booking accommodations or purchasing travel packages online. Scammers often create fake rental listings or offer deals that seem too good to be true. Before sending money, research the company, read reviews, and verify that the property or travel provider is legitimate.

Text Message Scams

Have you received a text claiming you owe money for unpaid tolls, package deliveries, or account issues? These messages often contain links designed to steal your personal information. If you receive an unexpected text, avoid clicking any links and contact the company directly using a trusted phone number or website.

Fake Sweepstakes and Prize Offers

Summer promotions and giveaways are common, but scammers use them as opportunities to trick consumers into providing personal information or paying fees to claim a prize. Remember: legitimate contests don't require you to pay money to collect winnings.

Charity and Disaster Relief Scams

Severe weather events often occur during the summer months. Unfortunately, fraudsters may pose as charitable organizations seeking donations. Before giving, research the organization and donate directly through official channels.

Protect Yourself

The good news is that a few simple precautions can help keep your information secure:

- Never share account numbers, passwords, or verification codes with anyone.
- Be cautious of unsolicited calls, texts, and emails.
- Verify requests for money or personal information before responding.
- Monitor your account activity regularly.
- Report suspicious activity immediately.

We're Here to Help

At First Watch Credit Union, protecting our members is a top priority. If you receive a suspicious call, text, email, or notice unusual activity on your account, contact us right away. Together, we can help keep your finances secure all year long. Enjoy your summer, and remember, while you may be taking a vacation, scammers never do.
